MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 25, 1872.

SOUTH CAROLINA.—The grand jury of Union county, South Carolina, have reported to the Court of General Sessions, the condition of the prisoners held by the United States military authorities at Chester. The jury find the jail in the same condition as at the time of their last report, except that shortly before their visit the prisoners had been allowed to remove the accumulated and decomposing filth from the premises, and had attempted to purify the place by scattering lime and building a flooring over it. Seven of the prisoners are supplied with rations by their friends. To the others the authorities supply rations of mouldy cornmeal and coffee, so-called, apparently made from parched corn. From this unwholesome food the prisoners are able to pick out an amount equal to half rations, which they eat. A colored prisoner was kept in a separate cell until the stench became intolerable throughout the building, when the other prisoners were allowed to clean it out. The Union Times and Chester Reporter describe successful raids by the cavalry on the 11th and 12th instant, in which nine of the best citizens of each county were "hugged" and carried along with the troops. A further stampede among the remaining white citizens of each county was the result. Some of the incidental effects of this state of things are shown by the following paragraph from the Camden Journal:

"There was but a slim attendance upon the sheriff's monthly sales on last Monday, and consequently what property was sold brought low prices. The following list will show: One tract of 700 acres sold for $100; one tract of $100, 50; one tract of 50 acres, $5; one tract of 6,301 acres, $2,500; one tract of 406 acres, $400; house and lot in Camden, on Rutledge street, $500."
